BERKELEY WINS.

An Exceedingly Fast Second Half.

HOW EACH ELEVEN MADE ITS SCORE

Best Mass Play of the Season. Hall Makes a Sensational Run.

Won by Berkeley.

With Kennedy and Ransome plunging ahead of him like two of Mr. Vining's fenderless trolley cars, Halfback Hall made one of the longest and most sensational runs yesterday that people have ever seen on a football field out this way.

It was easily the feature of the game Berkeley won from Reliance after the first half had closed with the score 10 to 0 against them.

The score was even when Hall made the run that will live for seasons in football history. Berkeley had livened up from the dead, gingerless sort of play she presented in the first half, and Reliance, tired and short of wind, was doing its level best to keep the figures balanced. The ball was with the Oakland people, and Walton, with one of his few good punts of the day, had sent it well down into Berkeley's territory, when Hall snapped it up, tucked it under his arm and started down the lot.

Just ahead of him were Ransome and Kennedy. They moved into action in less time than was required in the reading of one of Judge Lawlor's silver epigrams. Reliance men were tumbled head over heels as easily as pins drop in a bowling alley.

Section after section of the white-washed field did Hall skip over, while those men Kennedy and Ransome were making a dissolving view of the pack of Reliance athletes who tackled them from both sides and in front. They made it so easy for Hall that he didn't have to zig-zag more than twice during the whole journey, and when he landed the ball over the last strip of whitewash every man, woman and child in the crowd, including even the Reliance sympathizers cheered him for his performance.

One does not see a sixty-yard run in every game of football, and that was the distance Hall had to travel, with the whole pack of Athletic Club men close at his heels.

Outside of Hall's sprint there was not a whole lot for the spectators to rave over, and more than 2,000 people, tired of politics, had taken an election day refuge in the grand stands to watch the sport.

Reliance started the game, as they always do, with a go and snap that chilled the collegians. They went at the Berkeley line, found all the weak spots, and then plugged and plugged up against those weak spots for gains every time. Carter went through time and time again. So did Walton, the human pile driver, and big Bert Oliver, until he was so badly bruised up that they had to help him to his feet on two or three occasions. But he remained with the game to the finish.

It was with plays that looked like the revolving wedge of other days that Reliance worked the ball rapidly down to Berkeley's line, and Oliver went crashing through for the first touchdown. Walton kicked a goal, and after the line up it did not take Reliance very long to put the ball back into dangerous territory for Berkeley, and this time Carter went through and over for a touch-down. Walton missed the kick for goal, and at it they went once more. With Reliance at the old tactics of going through Berkeley's line, time was called for the first half, the score being 10 to 0 in favor of Reliance.

When the teams lined up again it was seen that Sherman had taken Whipple's place and Castlehun had succeeded Avery for Berkeley, while Pratt was in where Lanyon had played, and Nahl in J. Arlett's place for Reliance. Carter, his head swathed in bandages, was out for the game.

It was different football that Berkeley played in the second half. There was a snap and zip to their work that was not noticeable in the first. They seemed fresh and in good shape for a fight. On the other hand, the Athletic Club men played in listless form. They had no wind, did not get into action rapidly and were inclined to hug the ground on receiving the slightest jolt.

Berkeley lost no time in getting at Reliance. This time it was her turn to go through the center and around the ends, and soon Ransome was over for the first points that came Berkeley's way. He failed to kick a goal and the teams were soon mixed up again. A cheer went up when Sherman made the first decent run of the day, twenty yards around the end. Then there was much struggling back and forth, the ball going first to one and then the other team on downs. Finally, with the ball on Reliance's ten-yard line, Hall went through a hole for a touch-down, and this time Ransome kicked a goal, and a pretty kick he made of it, too.

Then it was that Hall made his famous run. The ball had not been in play two minutes before the half-back had it stowed under his arm and was making tracks for the end of the lot. Ransome kicked a goal and the score was where it stood at the finish, 16 to 10, Berkeley.

Reliance, on the kick-off, braced up and worked hard for another touch-down and chance to even up matters, and had they been given a few more minutes of play, would undoubtedly sent the ball over. They were dangerously close to the last notch of Berkeley and gaining steadily when the whistle of the referee ended the game and gave all a chance to go out and read election returns.

The Oakland.

The Magistrate was presented at the Oakland last evening in excellent style by a strong company with I. R. Stock well in the leading role. The play is one of the standard modern dramas and combines some strong scenes with a delicious flavor of refined humor. The Bacon Company gave first class support. The stage settings were complete and the whole performance up to date.

The strong political attractions detracted somewhat from the attendance but the performance was a most pleasurable one.

FROM MAINE TO CALIFORNIA.

THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES DECLARED FOR PROTECTION.

William McKinley Carries Thirty-One States Out of the Forty-Five.

CONGRESSMAN HILBORN WILL BE RETURNED TO WASHINGTON TO REPRESENT CALIFORNIA.

The Republican County and Legislative Ticket Elected With the Exception of the Supervisor From Murray Township.

Yesterday's Battle.

The great battle of ballots has been fought and the country is saved. Protection and prosperity will now be assured to the American people a fitting close to the National politics of the Nineteenth century, a century that has been crowded with inventions, scientific discoveries, war's and pestilences.

The people of this country have declared by their ballots that the honor of this nation shall remain untarnished and that the farmers, mechanics and laborers shall not be serfs, that they shall not be reduced to the level of the Chinese, Japanese and pauper labor of foreign countries; that the large cities of these United States shall teem with factories, filled with men and women who can hold up their heads and say "This is my own, my native land," ruled by the people of which I am one.

The result yesterday means thousands upon thousands of laboring people will be enabled to work and buy their own homes; that their children will be well dressed and that they will all receive an education.

It means that our prisons and insane asylums will have rooms to let in them because when there is prosperity in the land there is no resort to crime. It means that every man in business who has been struggling through this last four years of depression will at once feel a stimulus in his business. It means that capitalists will unlock their vaults and loan their money to the people which will put it in circulation and make it plentiful. It means an era of prosperity such as this country has never before experienced.

The election yesterday was probably one of the most quiet ones that was ever held in the United States. There was no hurrah, or animated discussions. Every man knew how he was going to vote and he walked up to the polls early and deposited his ballot and the result of this determination is shown in the balance of this article.

Baltimore (Md.), November 4 The Republicans have made a clean sweep of Maryland by a majority of 20,000 votes. They have also elected all six of the Congressmen by majorities ranging from 400 to 15,000.

St. Paul (Minn.), November 4. This State has gone for McKinley by a plurality of 50,000. Every Republican Congressman has been elected in the Seventh district except one and that one is in doubt.

Boston (Mass.), November 4. This State gives McKinley a plurality of 171,000, with all the Congressmen elected.

New Orleans (Louisiana), Nov. 4, gives Bryan a plurality of 40,000, and elects six Democratic Congressmen.

Detroit, (Mich.) Nov. 4.—This State has given McKinley 40,000 plurality and the Republicans have elected ten out of the twelve Congressmen.

Milwaukee, (Wis.) Nov. 4.—This State has gone Republican by 50,000 plurality. The Republicans also elect the Congressmen.

Seattle, (Wash.) Nov. 4.—McKinley has carried the State by 2,000, although the fusionists claim it for Bryan by a small majority.

Lincoln, (Neb.) Nov. 4.—Nebraska, the home of Mr. Bryan, has gone for McKinley by a plurality of 13,000, although the Democrats will not concede so large a majority.

Huron, (S. D.) Nov. Nov. 4.—South Dakota has thrown its vote to McKinley with a plurality of 10,000. All the Republican Congressmen have been elected by handsome majorities.

Austin, (Texas) Nov. 4.—This State, true to its traditions, has given Bryan a plurality of 100,000, and has elected all of the Democratic Congressmen.

Chicago Nov. 4.—McKinley has carried Illinois by a plurality of 140,000. All but two of the Republican Congressmen have been elected. Tanner for Governor has defeated Altgeld by 40,000 votes.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 4—Meagre returns indicate that Bryan has carried this State by 40,000 plurality. The Republicans, however, elect these Congressmen. McKinley carried the city of St. Louis by 25,000 votes.

Portland, Oregon, Nov. 4—McKinley has carried this State by 8000 plurality after a hard fought battle.

Trenton, N. J., Nov. 4—McKinley has carried New Jersey by a plurality of 70,000 votes and the Republicans have elected all of the eight Congressmen.

Cheyenne, Wyoming, Nov. 4—The returns in Wyoming are coming in very slowly, but the indications are that McKinley and all the Congressional nominees will carry the State.

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 4—McKinley has carried Ohio by a plurality of 102,000. Fourteen out of the sixteen Republican Congressmen have been elected, and five more are in doubt.

New York, Nov. 4.—McKinley carries this State by 300,000 plurality. The Republicans also elect twenty eight Congressmen, and both houses of the Legislature which insures a Republican United States Senator in the place of D. B. Hill.

Fargo, North Dakota, Nov. 4—McKinley has carried North Dakota by a plurality of 5000 votes. The Republicans have elected the Congressmen.

Des Moines, Nov. 4—Iowa has given McKinley a plurality of 100,000. The Republicans also elect all of the eleven Congressmen.

Boise City, Nov. 4.—The Democops carry Idaho for Bryan by 28,000.

Denver, Nov. 4.—Bryan and Sewall have carried Colorado by a plurality of 130,000.

Louisville, Nov. 4.—McKinley carries Kentucky by a plurality of 7,000 with prospects of it reaching 20,000. Eight Republican Congressmen have also been elected.

Topeka, Nov. 4—Kansas has joined the McKinley column by giving him a plurality of 10,000. The Republicans also elect five of the eight Congressmen.

Butte, Nov. 4—Montana is true to silver and has given Bryan a plurality of 15,000 votes.

Salt Lake, Nov. 4—Bryan has carried Utah by at least 45,000 majority.

Memphis, Nov.—Tennessee has gone Democratic by about 25,000 plurality.

White River, Nov. 4—Vermont rolls up a majority of 40,000 for McKinley and has elected a solid Republican delegation to Congress.

Reno, Nov. 4—Nevada has given Bryan a plurality of 5000. The Republicans have got the Legislature on joint ballot and will elect a Republican United States Senator.

San Francisco, Nov. 4.—California has gone Republican by 8,000. The Republicans have elected five of the seven Congressmen and have got the Legislature, which insures the selection of George C. Perkins and the defeat of Thos. V. Cator.

Oakland, Alameda county, has gone Republican by 3,000, electing all of the Assemblymen, the Supreme Judges and all but one Supervisor. Hilborn's majority is about 3,500 in this county and 2,000 in the district.

The majority of John Mitchell in the Fifth district is 281. In the Fourth district Roeth defeated Brown by a small margin. Owing to lack of space we are unable to give the returns of the whole county, but suffice to say that the Republican ticket is elected save one Supervisor.

In Berkeley the Justices of the Peace elected are C. R. Lord and W. H. H. Gentry.

The victory of John Mitchell by a majority of 281 votes was a surprise to Pelouze manipulators, and the People's Party men have not yet recovered from the defeat of Allyn, who was third in the race.

Dr. Anthony felt so bad last night when the Republican returns came in that he announced that he would at once settle up his business in this country and leave the United States.

Although it was supposed that West Berkeley was a Populist stronghold McKinley got a great big majority in the West End.

Ed Brennan will pay his debts without a murmur. We are one of the beneficiaries.

The returns received up to the hour of going to press indicate that McKinley's plurality of the popular vote will reach one million.

The streets in the city today are crowded with people, hurrahing for McKinley. Arrangements are being made there for a monster parade and roosters are roosting high just at present.

There will be the usual prayer meetings held in all of the churches of Berkeley this evening.

The GAZETTE was the only paper in Berkeley to give full reports last evening and it did not do it with a magic lantern either.

Fishermen are now enjoying a great deal of sport by angling off the long wharf at the end of the mole. The catch is principally rock cod.

The gathering of election returns and placing them in order for the readers of the paper is a job that is not relished by newspaper men as it is hard and tedious work.

Numerous Berkeley citizens went to San Francisco last evening to see the election returns as they came in, and some of them that we have heard of failed to catch the last train home.

LOST IT ALL

L. C. Andrews Makes Over $5000

IN ALASKA AND GAMBLES IT AWAY

Says the Miners That Return From That Country are Robbed on Shipboard.

Lost It All.

L. C. Andrews, a veteran miner of Oakland and one of the men who went north to seek gold with a party of prospectors last spring, says he took $4000 out of his placer mine and lost it all in a game of cards while on his return voyage.

Andrews came back on the steamer Funk and got into a poker game which cost him all he earned. He says now that many of those who returned with stories of disappointments in the north lost their gains in much the same way, and this gives a much different phase to the accounts given in the past of the gloomy prospects in and about Cook's Inlet. Andrews said, "We left St. Michael's September 3d with eighty-two miners from Circle City, Forty-Mile Creek and Salmon river, returning to civilization for the winter, housed in the 'tween decks. For the first five days out we were having heavy weather. With easing of the blow came a fair slant of wind from the westward. It was then the cards were brought out, and on a pork barrel lashed to the mainmast a game of poker was started.

"I lost $4000 and $250 was given back to me to go home on. I am not the only one who came home poor because of the poker games on board the ships."

Andrews thinks there is wealth in the north and is going back to dig out more of it.

Returns at East Berkeley.

It looks is if the citizens of Berkeley were robbed last evening in the way of getting telegraphic dispatches. They subscribed twenty dollars for the purpose of having earliest advices from the different parts of the country and according to a circular issued were to get bulletins up to one o'clock this morning.

The dispatches were put in the control of the Advocate to be displayed upon a screen.

Instead of getting news of any importance the subscribers were treated to a lot of stereopticon views of an old and varied nature. They furnished amusement for the small boy however and he made the night hideous with his howlings.

Dispatches of importance were received by the GAZETTE until midnight when it was fully known that there was a Republican landslide. Our bulletins gave the best and latest news from all parts of the United States and also gave such information from the State returns as could be obtained so early after the polls closed.

Found Human Remains.

There was a mysterious find of a human skull yesterday in the garden in front of Mr. Lynde's dwelling at 1162 Fifth street. Lynde was working among the weeds in a small plot when he struck a hard substance with his spade. He dug down to the object and uncovered the skull. In sifting the soil many teeth were brought to view. The spot where the grewsome object was found was close to the mudsill of the house. Lyde was prevented from further investigation by the woodwork. He reported the discovery to the Coroner, who will conduct operations to learn whether any other remains can be found. The oldest resident in that part of West Oakland is unable to explain the mystery. There was never so far as is remembered, a cemetery in that district. Some were inclined to believe that the remains are portions of cadavers buried by medical students.

The Republicans of Berkeley will celebrate the McKinley victory by a grand parade in Berkeley after which they will go to Oakland and join the parade there.

At His Home

Canton, Ohio, Nov. 4.—The fever of excitement in which Canton was plunged last night was taken up again this morning. In fact there was no intermission in the din of screeching steam whistles, band and drum corps and cannon salutes, the townspeople joining in the demonstration. McKinley was about the house about 8 o'clock after a nap broken by a demonstration.

At 4 o'clock he had stood on the roof of the porch reviewing the Tippecanoe Club, 1,000 strong, from Cleveland.

Then in order that Major and Mrs. McKinley might have a rest the local Reception Committee were early on hand to keep away visiting delegations.

In a general way the returns led to the conviction among McKinley's close friends that 239 electoral votes were assured beyond peradventure and 48 more were regarded as probable for McKinley and 18 doubtful.

Those regarded as certain are: Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, Wisconsin.

Joseph P. Smith, political secretary for McKinley, said: "The electoral vote of McKinley and Hobart will be somewhere between 289 and 353, leaving Bryan and Sewell not more than 92 to 136. In my judgement McKinley and Hobart will receive nearly, if not quite, 1,500,000 plurality of the popular vote."

A private dispatch from a trusted source at Wilmington, Del., is that the Democratic State Chairman had conceded the State to McKinley.

Hot Lunches for School Children

The proposition of serving warm lunches to the pupils of the Oakland High School was discussed by the Board of Education last night but nothing was done. An offer to serve warm dishes at 5 cents a apiece was discussed and will be further considered at the next meeting. It is quite likely that the idea will be adopted, but it will be some days before an award of the privilege will be made.

The Republican County Central Committee will meet this evening at its rooms in Oakland, and will make arrangements for a grand ratification meeting to be held in Oakland to morrow night.

The Unitarian Society has accepted the resignation of the trustees of the society to draw up resolutions expressing the profound regret of the members at Mr. Payne's withdrawal. His resignation was tendered to take effect January 1st, or, if he should find it necessary to leave sooner, before that time. At the society's annual business meeting many expressions of deep regret at the pastor's action were made and the members of the society were unanimous in the hope that he would remain to the end of the year.

The thermometer in Berkeley commenced to fall yesterday morning and by sundown the air was chilly. The Bryan men said it was the coldest night they had ever experienced in this cultured town.

Mrs. A. B. Stubenrauch, who has of late been at Paso Robles with her husband, has returned to Berkeley. Mr. Stubenrauch will soon assume his old position as clerk for Professor Hilgard.

Several novel bets such as wheeling a man from West to East Berkeley. Packing a sack of flour up and down Shattuck avenue for a whole day and others equally ar ridiculous, will have to be paid in a few days. It will be amusement for the bystanders but will be hard on the Bryanites.

McKINLEY AND VICTORY.

The great battle of ballots has been fought and victory has perched upon the banner of William McKinley, and confidence has been restored to the people of this country and now prosperity will once more shine upon the American people.

When day dawned yesterday morning it was known that the day would be a fine one. Long before noon the cheering intelligence was flashed over the wires announcing that in all the Eastern States the same weather conditions existed.

In Berkeley the election was as quiet if not more so than an ordinary municipal or school election.

The great bulk of the ballots had been cast before noon, and when the polls closed at 5 o'clock almost a complete vote according to the register had been cast. When the counting commenced it took but very few ballots to establish the fact that Berkeley was a strong factor in favor of McKinley column and that it did not want free silver.

When the returns began to arrive at the GAZETTE office from the East, they bore the glad tidings that the American people had been true to themselves and to their country and that they had voted for McKinley. As the returns continued to come in, it soon became a certainty that McKinley and Hobart had been elected and the air was rent with cheers. After that interest was centered upon our own State, and the crowds howled with delight when it became apparent that Congressman Hilborn had been elected by a safe majority and that the Legislature was Republican on joint ballot, thereby preventing such a catastrophe as the election of Thomas V. Cator to the United States Senate.

The Superior Judges are safe in the Republican column and California has not disgraced itself but is safe in the Republican column, as are also Oregon and Washington. The Republicans carried twenty-five States safe, and the probabilities are that five more States will line up in the McKinley line.

The people of the nation are to be congratulated upon the great victory they have won and we feel sure that prosperity will visit us once more and that we will soon be a happy and contented nation, for our factories and mills will now open and thousands of people will be employed. These factories will not wait until McKinley is inaugurated to open, but will open just as soon as the long neglected machinery and looms can be put in running order.

COERCION—NIT

The San Francisco Examiner for the past two weeks has been howling coercion, that all the great Republican parades that have been held throughout the United States were filled with men who were forced to march in a McKinley procession or loose their employment, but that when election day came they would vote for Bryan. Election day has come and gone and McKinley has been elected by the votes of those men who have paraded under the McKinley banner.

The GAZETTE claimed all along that the statements made by the Examiner and the Democratic party managers were an insult to the manhood of the American laborer and mechanic, and these men, who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, have given the lie to the Examiner and hurled its false statements back into its teeth.

The American laborer and mechanic knew that without protection there was no chance for them to get free silver dollars or any other kind of dollars, so they marched to the polls the same as they did in the parades and cast their ballots for the party and the candidates that has always kept its promises and under whose administration prosperity has always shone.

Even the neighbors of Mr. Bryan in his own home, while they had the greatest respect for him, would not vote for him, for the reason that they knew him to be at heart a free trader, and that he cared nothing for the American farmer and producer. They had an example of it in his vote in Congress and in his opposition to the two beet sugar factories in Nebraska that he assisted in crippling. His attitude on the sugar question alone cost the farmers of Nebraska millions of dollars, consequently his neighbors could not vote for him.

SUPERVISOR MITCHELL.

One of the most gallant fights that was made in the campaign was the one that was made for John Mitchell for Supervisor of the Fifth district. Seven different candidates were arraigned against him and all sorts of stories and campaign lies were circulated about him. The present incumbent, Mr. Delonze, spent a large amount of money to defeat him, yet above all the din and clamor he broke through the lines and jumped over all the obstructions and was elected.

The GAZETTE is glad that he is elected for it knows that he will make a good officer and that he will fulfil every claim that the GAZETTE has made for him. West Berkeley will greatly benefit by his election for it will get good roads.

San Pablo avenue will no longer be an eyesore to our people, for it will be graded and macadamized to the Contra Costa line, excepting that portion which lies in Berkeley and Oakland. He will also see that Telegraph avenue in that portion which is in his district will also receive his attention.

The affairs of the county insofar as Mr. Mitchell is concerned will receive the most careful attention. He will not be miserly in the wants of the county, neither will he be extravagant but will run the county business on the same careful lines that he conducts his own business, and the people will be more than satisfied with him. He is not a fanatic and legitimate sport and all licensed business will receive his support and impartial treatment.

McKinley swept the country from Maine to California, and also several Southern States.

The Democratic party or that portion of it that is left on earth, has entirely swallowed up the Populist Party all over the country.

It was a glorious victory, and we think that the sun shone brighter this morning on account of it. The shades of Lincoln, Grant and Garfield must have hovered close to every voter in this land yesterday.

Tom Watson is a happy man today. He was not elected Vice-President, neither was his friend (?) Sewell of Maine. How he will crow over Chairman Jones.

That dish of crow that our friend Rawson has been preparing for us for the past few weeks did not materialize this morning. Guess Fred changed his mind and is trying to bolt it down himself.

The fusion plan did not work in this county very well, judging by the returns, as the most of the fusion candidates failed to get even the vote of one party.

The battle is now over and all those whose relations have been strained on account of a difference in politics will shake hands and become friends again. The majority of the people have spoken, and in this country the majority rules. Thank God we are Americans.

The Sixth Amendment was defeated and our mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts have been denied the ballot. They made a gallant fight, however, and they will not stop because they have been defeated, but will work until finally victory will perch upon their banner.

A very noticeable fact when the ballots were being counted yesterday was the lack of votes for the Peoples Party electors. The Democratic electors seemed to get all the votes that were cast by Democrats and Populists will be out of politics at the next election, unless they get their candidates on the ticket by petition.

The Frawley Engagement.

The engagement of the famed Frawley company, which opens at the Macdonough Theatre on Thursday evening, promises to be one of the most successful ever held at the house. The company will play three nights and a matinee and will present the best pieces in its repertoire.

Fred Rawson will now peddle War Grand thus spread good literature over the land. He volunteered to sell War Crys the balance of his life if McKinley was elected. Wonder whether he will like his job?

NAY, ASK NO VOW.

Nay, ask no vow, dear heart. To [illegible] slips
The word "forever" from our careless lips.
We pledge [illegible] unity when a [illegible]
Forgotten, silenced, mingle clay with clay.
How do you know your eyes [illegible] always shine
With that glad welcome when they meet with mine?
How dare I say this heart for aye will swell
To answer yours, knowing its frailty well?
Today sees plighted troth and clasping hands,
Tomorrow shattered faith and broken bands.
Oh, pitiful for mortal lips to swear!
[illegible] uncertain, fervent prayer
That our love's flower, escaping frost and blight,
May bloom immortal, as we hope tonight.

—Catharine Young Glen in Century.

THE APPRENTICE.

Three hundred years ago there lived at Augsburg a lad named Willibald, apprentice to a smith, whose industry obtained him the regard of his master, while his good nature caused him to be a favorite with all who knew him. His master so highly estimated his skill that when the boy grew into a man he offered to make him his partner and hinted that he was not displeased at the young man's friendship with his daughter.

Willibald, though favored by the young lady, was quite free from any feeling of love for her, and the reason of his coldness was apparent.

In the small house opposite lived Dame Martha, a respectable widow, with a granddaughter of uncommon loveliness. Young Ellen had quite captivated Willibald, and when he saw her through the window or the open door he thought there could be no happiness so great as that of calling her his own. But the old woman seldom suffered her to stir from her sight; so that there was no opportunity for the young man to declare the passion with which the fair girl had inspired him.

For a long while Willibald sought some pretense to visit their dwelling, but fortune at length favored him. One day, when the snow made the ground so slippery as to be dangerous to an infirm person, he saw Dame Martha coming out of the church alone. He hastened to offer the assistance of his arm and conducted her home. She invited him to enter, for she thought that only a very worthy young man would be so attentive to an aged dame.

Who was now happier than Willibald? From this day he was one of Dame Martha's most frequent visitors and was always received with a welcome. In process of time he made bold to lay open his heart to the old woman and ask permission to make love to her granddaughter. "My dear young friend," was her reply, "I have the highest esteem for you and could wish Ellen no better husband. I believe she loves you, too, but you have not yet sufficient for the support of a wife. Save from your wages a decent sum, say 30 goldpieces, for a beginning, then come and receive your bride with my blessing."

Willibald was almost beside himself with joy. He had now an object for labor and frugality, and he redoubled his industry, laying by carefully all he made.

About this time Dame Martha became indisposed with a bad cough, and her physician prescribed change of air, so she took a little cottage in the suburbs, about an hour's walk from the city.

One day, as Willibald approached the house, Ellen came to meet him, weeping. She sobbed bitterly as he drew near and exclaimed, "Ah, Willibald, what a misfortune."

"You know it then?" cried he with faltering voice.

"What—know—what?" asked Ellen quickly and eagerly.

"That I have been robbed of my box of money," answered the youth in a tone of anguish.

"Alas," replied Ellen, "then misfortunes never come singly. Yesterday a rich gentleman came to our cottage and demanded my hand in marriage. His name is Werner. He is a rich merchant from Ulm. Even now he is sitting in the room yonder with my grandma, drinking wine and telling her of his houses and lands, while his servant, who stands by the chimney, confirms everything he says. But be comforted, dear Willibald. My grandma may say what she will; I will die rather than be faithless to you."

Here Dame Martha came out of the house and commanded Ellen to go in directly. The poor girl was forced to obey, and the old woman said to Willibald: "Young man, I came to say to you that I think it best that you should come no more to my cottage. A rich man is a suitor for my Ellen, and it is my duty to do what is for her good."

"Very good—very good, Dame Martha," cried Willibald, half choking with emotion. "I say nothing of your conduct. If you choose to break an honest fellow's heart—and your own word also—'tis all the same to me."

And he hastened madly away.

Some hours must have passed unmarked in the indulgence of his grief, for it was late when he rose and tried to find his way homeward. After wandering about some time, without being able to discover the road, he found that he was in a churchyard. "There is the house where the people go to pray," murmured the youth bitterly. "Have I not also prayed? Have I not kept my soul from sin? Prayers will not give Ellen back, else would I pray—aye, to the bad fiend himself—and promise to be his, so she would be mine."

Scarce had the distracted youth uttered these words when a sound of shrill laughter nearly startled him, and, looking round, he saw a figure which he had no difficulty in recognizing by the well known horns and cloven foot. "I am here," cried he in hoarse tones, "at your service and ready to do your bidding, asking only a small service in return."

"What is that?" Willibald mustered courage to say, though he trembled all over.

"I have a piece of work for you. I will take you to a spot where lies buried one of my subjects. You must make me an iron railing round this grave, and in reward I will give you your bride."

"If you have nothing more to ask, I am content," replied the young man.

"This is all, but it is a harder task than you imagine. You have but one hour to work. At 12 you must begin and the railing must be completed by the time the clock strikes 1. If it is done, you are free; if not, you belong to me forever."

Willibald pledged himself to the unhallowed contract and followed the fiend, who hobbled on till he stood by a new made grave.

At the same instant Willibald saw fire spring from the ground and caught a glimpse of several bars of iron and the tools of his trade. The clock struck 12, and, starting, he betook himself to work. So diligently did he apply himself that the work grew rapidly under his hand. A single screw only was wanting when the clock was heard striking 1, and Willibald fell to the ground insensible.

When his senses returned, it was morning, the sun was shining brightly, and he thought all that had passed a wild dream.

Full of shame and repentance, Willibald hastened to the church to pray for the pardon of his dreadful sin. His heart was lighter after the prayer, but he could not go home to work that day, and sadly he walked toward Dame Martha's cottage.

Ellen came to meet him, as before, and shed tears as she threw her arms around his neck.

"This time," she said, "they are tears of joy. When you left so suddenly yesterday, I came into the garden, where I might weep undisturbed. I sat there long after dusk, when, as I leaned my head on the table yonder, a female figure approached me. She resembled my dead mother and said: 'Weep not, my child, but pray—pray for your lover. He is in very great danger.' She vanished before I could thank her, but I remembered her words and prayed for you all night long."

The young man shuddered, but raised his eyes upward in thankfulness.

"Early this morning," continued the damsel, "came Herr Werner. I went out to meet him and told him I would die rather than become his wife. He was much vexed, but, without another word, mounted his horse and rode away, followed by his servant. My grandma was angry, but my conscience told me I did right, and now that you return to me in safety, Willibald, I am sure that I have the blessing of heaven."

And the young smith felt the same assurance, when, a few days later, his box of treasure was restored to him by his master's daughter, who, in a fit of jealousy, had stolen it from him. Dame Martha could no longer withhold her consent, but before Willibald dared to claim Ellen as his bride he confessed his great sin to the priest and submitted to the penance enjoined upon him, and this, of course, saved him.

The lovers were married and lived happily, remembering their past troubles only as a warning against discontent and an act of submission to Providence.—Exchange.

A MUSICAL STAR.

On coming home one evening I found among a lot of invitations the following card:

"The Countess Foricelli, at home, Thursday, January the twentieth—music."

Then below was written in ink:

"Mlle. Vittoria Trajonska."

Who was Vittoria Trajonska? I felt quite distrustful. Perhaps I was to hear a sonata full of complicated harmonies or a grand aria bristling with vocalizations "most difficult to execute." And I recalled the story of the man to whom some one remarked, "You are about to hear a very difficult sonata," and who answered with a sigh, "If it were only impossible."

It was a rather queer set besides that you met at the countess'—an odd mixture of about every nationality, and, it must be admitted, of every kind of society. Side by side with well known and well established names you met certain overdecorated majors who had not certainly won their rank in the regular army, and Russian princesses who must have acquired theirs by right of seniority. In excuse it was said of the hostess, "She's a foreigner." And as, after all, hers was a very amusing house, as her balls were charming and her suppers perfect, society went there anyhow, though with certain restrictions. As for the young men, it was for them Mohammed's paradise. Many of the fair foreigners possibly had husbands somewhere, but they had forgotten them in far distant lands and seemed to be able to get on beautifully without them. In short, all things considered, there was not much risk of being bored, and on the date mentioned I put in an appearance in the countess' dining rooms.

"Oh, my dear friend," she said as soon as she saw me, gesticulating, as was her custom, "how very glad I am to see you! You will hear a wonder tonight—Vittoria Trajonska. You know the Trajonskas, the best blood in Poland. The father risked his entire fortune in the insurrection of 1866. The brother is in Siberia. They are noble hearts. Come and be presented."

She took me into a little room hung in mauve satin, with bands of black velvet, and there I found myself face to face with a tall girl with a roll of music in her hand. She was magnificently handsome. Her regular profile stood out against the dark hangings like an antique cameo. She was pale and dark and had great blue eyes edged with black lashes that turned back and gave a strange energy to her glance. Her black satin evening dress fell about her in long folds. She wore no jewels. A simple spray of white lilac was fastened in her jet black hair.

"This gentleman is a thorough musician," said the countess as she presented me, "and quite worthy to appreciate your wonderful talent."

I bowed.

"You'll see," she went on to me, "that you will be most enthusiastic. Mademoiselle sings with her soul. In every song she puts a part of her life—which means that if she is not careful the sword will wear out the scabbard. Now, as you know each other, I must go and settle my other guests; so I'll leave you."

And this scatter brained countess departed, leaving me with the fair Vittoria. I looked at her. By way of keeping herself in countenance, she leaned her beautiful bare arm on the mantelpiece and began to turn over the score she was holding. The silence became embarrassing.

"You should save yourself; mademoiselle," I said, "and not trifle with your artistic temperament."

She raised her great blue eyes to mine.

"Save myself! What for?" she answered. "I have never been able to do things by halves. When anything pleases me, I give myself to it passionately. I love music. It is a fair land, full of dreams which allow us to soar above the little vexations of life and to forget much.

"There are some people," she went on, "who see in art only a trade. Art is a sacred thing, which requires a worthy frame. When a bird can no longer sing on the tree which pleases it, it should be mute."

"But you forget, mademoiselle," I ventured, "that there are some poor birds which must sing to live."

"Then they had better die."

I was really quite moved. This language full of the Polish bombast that carries every feeling to an extreme, these words that would have appeared to me ridiculously exaggerated from any one else, seemed quite simple from the lips of this tall, handsome girl. As she spoke her face had become transfigured. We were standing close together. Almost unconsciously I held out my hand to her. She hesitated, slightly surprised. Then she put her long, slim fingers into mine and shook hands cordially. "This is a compact of friendship," I said, keeping her hand in mine.

"Oh, I do not give my friendship so quickly. Besides, I am not a woman; I am a comrade. We may be good comrades, if you like."

Just then the countess came back.

"Ha, ha! The ice is broken, I see. I am very glad, for you were made to understand each other. My dear, you are going to have a splendid audience—the Paraperes, the Boisonforts, the Precy-Bussacs. Colonel Tournecourt has come with Jemil-Pasha. As for you," turning to me, "if you want a seat, you had better hurry, for the first drawing room is crowded."

I bowed to the fair Vittoria and made my way out to the front. A platform, with a piano, formed the stage. Before this platform a very swell audience, from which, however, young girls seemed to have been systematically excluded, was crowded on to gilt chairs.

Far from following the absurd custom of collecting all the women together in the first room and leaving the men to stand up in the doorways, the countess was in the habit of allowing every man to sit where he liked, next to the woman who happened to suit him. This system had many advantages. In the first place, it made a better audience. A woman who would have remained unmoved for want of some one to whom to communicate her impressions became enthusiastic seated next to a man who pleased her and who talked to her. Besides, it was the men only who really applauded. When a woman has tapped on her fan with the tips of her gloved fingers, she imagines she has displayed the highest degree of enthusiasm.

I elbowed my way through and succeeded in approaching Colonel Tournecourt.

"My dear fellow, is that you?" he remarked in a voice which made the whole room turn round to look. "See here, don't you want my seat?"

"Oh, colonel, I couldn't think of disturbing you."

"Not at all. You can make yourself agreeable to my mother-in-law. Besides," he said in my ear, "I will admit that I am stifling, and that I don't care a hang for chamber music. I would rather go and get a little fresh air in the neighborhood of the refreshment table."

I thanked him effusively and slipped in next the colonel's majestic mother-in-law, whose plump form considerably overflowed the space occupied by the little gilt chair. I began to understand the colonel's eagerness to give me his seat. But anyhow, such as it was, it commanded a good view of the prima donna of the evening. The three blows, the signal to begin, were struck. Some one said, "Hush, hush!" and a gentleman appeared with artificially curly hair, a low necked collar, and the air of a masher. He bowed gravely, then deposited a score on the music rack. This done, he dropped on to the piano stool, eased his collar, pulled down his cuffs, then, with eyes upturned to heaven, struck a few chords intermingled with complicated scales, which were intended to say to the audience: "You see, I am merely an accompanist this evening, but I could dazzle you if I liked." It is pure modesty on my part."

At this moment Vittoria made her entrance and was greeted with three rounds of applause, to which she responded by a rather haughty courtesy. Then she went to the piano and began the great aria from the second act of "Rigoletto." The cry of the wounded heart, the agony of love betrayed, the tears of the poor girl who finds she has been deceived by her royal lover, all these were rendered with marvelous passion. It seemed like a succession of sobs rising in crescendo until the last great final cry which ends this admirable piece of music. The women cried; the men twisted their mustaches. When it was ended, there was a thunder of applause which lasted many minutes. The women threw her their bouquets, the men the flowers from their buttonholes. There was an indescribable clamor.

But she, more moved by the music she had just sung than by the enthusiasm it had provoked, little by little regained her self possession. Her hostess rushed to her and kissed her affectionately.

"My dear," she said, "yours is a very wonderful talent!"

"Mademoiselle," said a bald old gentleman, profiting by the opportunity to hold both her hands, "never since Malibran have I enjoyed a pleasure equal to that of this evening. You owe yourself to the stage, mademoiselle. I know what I am saying—you are a great artist. Tomorrow I shall see the manager of Les Italiens."

"Why of Les Italiens?" retorted another much decorated gentleman. "The greatest French stage claims her. Mademoiselle, you may look forward to being soon sent for by the manager of the Grand Opera."

"What an admirable organ!"

"And what dramatic feeling!"

"Superb, splendid, wonderful!"

Poor Trajonska, amid the deluge of flowers and compliments, did not know which to listen to. It was a real triumph. At the supper which followed the Countess Foricelli made her sit opposite to her, and all the guests drank the most enthusiastic toasts to her honor.

"To the future star!"

"To Vittoria Trajonska! To her brilliant destiny!"

"Well," I said leaning toward her, "a splendid career is open to you. Tomorrow all Paris will applaud your name. Will the tree on which you are to sing seem beautiful enough?"

"Who can tell?" she answered.

Two years went by, and I heard no more of the singer. She had doubtless contracted some excellent engagement in Russia, America or Italy, and I expected to see her return to Paris some day after having exhausted success and laurels elsewhere.

Last spring I went to London for the season. One evening, as I was on my way to Her Majesty's opera, where it happened that "Rigoletto" was to be given, my thoughts went back to that evening at the Countess Foricelli's, and a crowd of memories rushed upon me. I recalled the wild applause, the flowers, the toasts. "I wonder what has become of her?" I said to myself as I walked through the noisy crowd that always fills Oxford street. The hansoms were going rapidly by with their bright lights and their brass trimmings. The omnibuses passed noisily. The conductors, standing on the steps and hanging on by a leather strap, summoned their passengers with voice and gesture. Sandwich men came down the street carrying in gigantic letters on their shoulders the names of the plays that were running at the time. Here and there a stiff, motionless policeman gave the crowd a glance of kindly protection. Suddenly I started. At the head of Trafalgar square, in the light of a street lamp, I saw Vittoria Trajonska go by.

She was all in black and very plainly dressed. She looked older and preoccupied, but still it was undoubtedly she. The people nudged each other and pointed her out as she passed. Evidently the crowd knew her already. She must be a great celebrity. Who could tell? Perhaps it was she I was about to hear in "Rigoletto" at Her Majesty's Opera.

I quickened my steps and prepared to address her, when all at once I saw her stop. She signed to a man whom I had not before noticed, and who was walking in the roadway near the curb dragging a handcart, in which was a piano, right in the middle of Oxford street. The crowd at once formed a circle, as though for a sight to which it was quite accustomed, and the policemen took measures to leave a passage for vehicles on each side of the knot of people. I acknowledge that I was greatly puzzled. Vittoria pushed through the crowd, then with the same slow, majestic step with which she had presented herself on the countess' platform she went to the piano, seated herself on a little camp stool covered with an old piece of worsted work and began to sing in the open street.

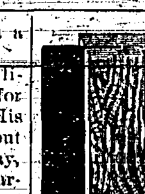

And while she sang the cabs rolled by at right and left of her, the omnibus drivers cracked their whips as they passed, the whole great city kept up its usual clamor around the singer, and all this time Vittoria sang with the full strength of her voice the last aria of "Faust":

Anges purs, anges radieux,
Portez mon ame au sein des cieux!

When it was ended, the man took off his cap, passed it around among the crowd and gathered an ample harvest of coppers. Then he reloaded the camp stool and piano on the handcart, and they started off to stop again a couple of hundred paces farther on.

She suddenly caught sight of me in the crowd and without any feeling of false shame came straight toward me.

"Well," she said, "you were right. There are some poor birds which must sing to live."—Translated From the French For Short Stories.

WERE I BUT HIS WIFE

Were I but his own wife, to guard and to guide him,
'Tis little of sorrow should fall on my dear.
I'd chant him my low love verses, stealing beside him,
So faint and so tender his heart would but hear.

I'd pull the wild blossoms from valley and highland,
And there at his feet would I lay them all down.
I'd sing him the song of our poor stricken island
Till his heart was on fire with love like my own.

There's a rose by his dwelling. I'd tend the lone treasure,
That he might have flowers when the summer would come.
There's a harp in his hall. I would wake its sweet measure,
For he must have music to brighten his home.

Were I but his own wife to guide and to guard him,
'Tis little of sorrow should fall on my dear,
For every kind glance my whole life would award him.
In sickness I'd soothe and in sadness I'd cheer.

My heart is a fount welling upward forever,
When I think of my true love by night or by day,
That heart keeps its faith like a fast flowing river
Which gushes forever and sings on its way.

I have thoughts full of peace for his soul to repose in,
Were I but his own wife to win and to woo,
Oh, sweet, if the night of misfortune were closing,
To rise like the morning star, darling, for you.

—Mary Downing in Minneapolis Journal.

"BUSINESS."

Mr. Percival Houghton was standing near the door in the Paultons' drawing room.

Houghton was not a very popular member of his set on account of a perilous faculty he had of avoiding all social functions. He was to be found at the Paultons' today—well, if the matter were probed to the bottom, principally because he was an old friend of the family and Jack Paulton had reminded him he must not send a refusal at the peril of a serious breach in their friendship.

Some one plucked his sleeve. It was his hostess.

"You remind me very much," said Mrs. Paulton, "of a statue I once saw of Achilles, I think it was. Why this heroic abstractedness?"

Houghton had not yet spoken of his embarrassment when she put an end to it prettily, sparing him the additional confusion of an explanation.

"Come, let us descend to things more substantial than dead heroes, if not less poetical. I have a pleasant surprise in store for you."

"Indeed!"

"Yes. Let me fetch you to an old friend just returned from over the sea—Miss Alice Coates."

She conducted him to the damsel in question and left them together.

"I'm heartily glad to see you again, Miss Coates," said Houghton, a trifle awkwardly.

"You may call me Alice, as you did before I went abroad," said the girl with whom Mrs. Paulton had left him, and then mischievously, "though I am quite grown up now, you see."

"Dear me, yes; quite grown up. Do you remember our chats, when we used to poke fun at the courtly old dames at your mother's at homes? I have never found congenial company since you went abroad, and I have gone out of society entirely—become a kind of commercial anchorite."

"How fortunate you are. But then you never really cared for society, did you?"

"No, indeed, nor did you. Are your ideas unchanged, Alice?"

"Well, in a way. I still think, as you used to say, the world would be better off if it did not trifle with precious time. Yet—and I know you will pardon me—I am surprised to find you single. Is it possible there has been no one charming enough to break through the pessimistic ice of your nature?"

"No one, indeed. But though I will not be so vain as to say it is entirely, yet I will be bold enough to say to my old confidant, it has been largely due to the fact that I have not had the time to devote to lovemaking. And, you know, it takes a great deal of gadding about before a man may even evidence his affections slightly."

"That's very true."

"Now, don't you think yourself that the conventional wooing is a very lamentable sacrifice of time?"

"If the woman in me decides, no; but if I persevere along strictly common sense lines, perhaps yes."

"How charming you are! Jove! You have not changed a jot, Alice, since your hair has been turned up and you have donned the harness of social slavery. But, to continue our subject, I honestly think this business of love and marriage might be expedited, for instance, in the commercial way. A man comes into my office with a proposition that is almost as important to me as a marriage, for it affects my life's affairs very radically. He wants an answer that same day—immediately, if possible. True, I take, say, half an hour or an hour to turn the matter over in my mind and view it in every light. As a rule, in that length of time I have come to a satisfactory conclusion. Now, if I could find a woman to whom I might say: 'Here, let us expedite matters. Let us get this preliminary business of lovemaking over immediately and come to the point without further ado'—Of course it should be some one with whom one is rather well acquainted, as, for instance, you and I"—

"Mr. Houghton!"

"There, there, you see heresy will crop out even in an old adherent. Let me continue. I take out my watch this way and say: 'It is just 10 o'clock now, Alice. I love you very dearly. Will you marry me tomorrow?'"

"How charmingly ridiculous."

"That's right. So it is, perhaps, ridiculous, and I shall have to turn in again on my poor, old lonely soul—no one understands."

"But, my dear friend, am I to believe your peculiar theories carry you seriously so far as that?"

"I am profoundly in earnest. My affairs of business are so absorbing that I candidly can give no time to lovemaking."

"Then you deserve never to get a wife, if you cannot sacrifice your business for her. Why, lovemaking is the best part of a woman's life."

"Ah, well! I had expected to find in you, if not a firm believer in my theories, at least a strong sympathizer. That settles it. You are the last straw. I shall never marry."

Alice, of course, might have turned the conversation into other channels, but somehow she did not feel that she wanted to do so.

"Well, supposing, Mr. Houghton," she began after a pause, "I should say in the rustic fashion: 'I love you also very dearly. I am willing'"

Though she tried to say this with admirable simplicity her face flushed in spite of her.

Houghton noticed the blush, and straightway became himself excited, yet without betraying it.

LOST.

On Saturday, the 24th of October, two bunches of keys, either on the 4 o'clock boat from San Francisco, or the train coming to Berkeley. Finder will receive $2.50 reward by returning the same to the Dwight Way Newstand, East Berkeley. Oct 31 tf

"Good," said he, "I should say. And now, if you will excuse me, I shall speak with your father. He is here, I understand?"

Then, taking out his watch, "It is now 15 minutes to 10. Where's your father?"

"I think he is"—and never, until her dying day, will she understand how these words escaped her with such perfect inconsequence—"I think he is in the library with Mr. Paulton."

Houghton arose, and, putting the watch back into his pocket, made as to go away.

Miss Coates caught his sleeve. She was trembling, and the smiles had died out of her face. Said she: "Oh, Percy! —I mean Mr. Houghton—don't be so foolish. He will think you are insane."

He drew the sleeve away gently. "Be careful, Alice," said he. "We are attracting attention. Don't make a scene."

The next moment he was gone, and in a daze of excitement and confusion Alice hurried to the conservatory and dashed in among the palms.

When Houghton walked into the library, he found Alice's father and Jack Paulton smoking and chatting listlessly.

"Major Coates, I have just proposed to your daughter, and she has accepted me. Are you willing we should be married tomorrow?"

The cigar fell from the lips of the major, and he looked in blank amazement, first upon his interrogator and then upon Paulton, with a slight questioning aspect in the last glance. Paulton burst out laughing, and the major turned again to Houghton helplessly and said:

"Percy, my boy, have you lost your senses?"

"Trne," the other answered, drawing a chair up to the table, "this requires some explanation. Doesn't it?"

Then he told them of the conversation between himself and Alice as well as explaining incidentally many of his views of life which bore directly and some even which had no bearing at all upon the subject at present of vital interest.

"But Alice?" said the major. "I cannot believe she is a party to such wild plans."

"Oh, yes, I know she will be agreeable," answered Houghton. "She has said so."

"Yet I am sure she will have changed her mind by this time. She has had time to think it over collectedly. I'll go and ask her."

"No," put in Paulton, rising. "Let me do that for you."

"I'll give you just three minutes, Jack," said Houghton.—London Sun.

Not Eager For Service In Cuba.

Spanish soldiers are betraying an insurmountable aversion to a campaign in Cuba, and desertions have been very frequent of late. This has led to the adoption of an extremely strict surveillance along the Pyrenean frontier, and all the trains running to France are carefully scrutinized by the Spanish gendarmes, to the annoyance and discomfort of many of the passengers. Young men are subjected to a severe examination, and those who are unable to establish their identity or give a satisfactory explanation of the motives of their journey are compelled to alight and are conducted to the gendarmerie, where they are again plied with questions, all the deserters detected in this way being at once handed over to the military authorities. This often entails considerable delay, and in spite of the watchfulness of the officials many young soldiers still succeed in making their way into France.—London Telegraph.

John Vasey is a firm believer in McKinley and he says that the good times are setting in already. Before election he tried to collect several bills that were due him, but could not do so. This morning one of its customers drove up to his shop and paid his bill with the remark that had Bryan been elected he would never have got it. Mr. Vasey then started out on a collecting tour and collected from every one he called upon, and he is thoroughly convinced that the era of good times is now upon us.

Several of the engineers on the Southern Pacific had the cowcatchers on their engines decorated with brooms this morning indicating that McKinley had swept the country.
